HEALTHCARE ORGANIZATIONS URGED TO REINSTATE QUALITY ASSURANCE PROGRAMS

While healthcare organizations are implementing clinical documentation improvement (CDI) programs to review for clinical conditions, it’s equally important they incorporate quality assurance (QA) programs to address the quality of all healthcare documentation. The absence of a QA program in electronic health record documentation processes can compromise patient care and safety, revenue cycle management, and risk management. To help, AHIMA and the Association for Healthcare Documentation Integrity (AHDI) created a resource kit, "Clinician- Created Documentation: Reinstating Quality Assurance Programs to Safeguard Patients and Providers." The kit provides a variety of tools to educate the C-suite while implementing or reinstating a QA program.

Access the kit or learn more in a press release.

CONCERNS OVER FITNESS DEVICES AND PRIVACY

Senator Charles Schumer (D-NY) has called for the Federal Trade Commission to compel makers of fitness and health related mobile apps and devices to "clearly explain to users how their data is being used, and allow consumers to opt-out of data sharing." He also wants companies to adopt measures that conceal users' identify and protect their information in the event of a security breach. In a statement, the senator said the data personal fitness devices and apps collect "on your health, sleep, and location, should be just that — personal." That this information could be sold without the user's consent "is a true privacy nightmare." Read more in a press release.

GUIDE HELPS CONSUMERS NAVIGATE THE HEALTHCARE SYSTEM

Knowing that even the best informed patient or caregiver can find the complex healthcare system, AHIMA has developed a reference guide on how to adequately prepare for a doctor or hospital visit and assess and understand the health records created during care.

The guide has been posted on myPHR.com, AHIMA's patient-facing website offering resources for accessing and effectively using health information. While the guide is developed for consumers, AHIMA officials say they also hope HIM professionals will recommend the guide and make it available to the patients and caregivers they encounter during their work and everyday life.

Access the guide or learn more at the Journal of AHIMA website.

POLICY BRIEF LOOKS FOR REASONS BEHIND SLOW INTEROPERABILITY

Lack of a business case, cost, lack of standards adoption and interoperability of systems, and concerns about privacy, security, and liability are some of the reasons why very few providers are sharing electronic information, according to a policy brief written by Janet Marchibroda, director of the Health Innovation Initiative at the Bipartisan Policy Center, and produced through a partnership between Health Affairs and the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. The report cites stage 3 of meaningful use as "a significant opportunity to advance the interoperability of EHR technology and electronic information sharing among providers," and highlights recent goals and recommendations for information sharing toward higher-quality, more cost-effective care.
